Universal Credit is driving families to food banks

- 51% rise in food bank use in Universal Credit Areas; 13% rise in other areas
- The Trussell Trust's report on the impact of Universal Credit report is clear - families are being pushed into financial crisis and towards foodbanks
- Churches welcome this important report and call on Government to focus on ensuring Universal Credit meets families' basic needs

"A benefit system that allows families to go hungry is a benefit system that is failing," said Paul Morrison who advises a group of national Christian Churches on poverty.

"The Government's drive to reduce spending and to focus on work incentives means we have lost sight of the purpose of a welfare system – ensuring that families are fed. Cuts to Universal Credit have been justified as providing an incentive to work. It is now clear that reducing and delaying the incomes of some of the poorest families has significant consequences including hunger.
